Harold,

I spent some time going through the stacks at Hood library with no success. Then it occurred to me that the source might be in books received that had not yet been catalogued. Because Samet's staff situation is so thin there had accumulated more than 30 boxes of boxes that were donated but had not been catalogued. I went through the boxes and found the Gray hearings. It was in the box that Clay had donated to the library.

Clay sent over the computer the first chapter on Holland.

Thanks for rescuing the Gray hearings and for the first chapter with which I've done what Clay suggested. But I am concerned that you found the hearing where it had no business being and with what has ~~abp~~ happened to the other boxes which you first numbered at four and then at seven. I phoned Samet as soon as I saw this and she denies it is so. I'd hate for the others to be lost and I hope somebody will undo what was done and should not be done. Most if ~~and~~ not all of those books are essential to the manuscripts based on them to a large degree, and they are essential if any questiones are asked about those manuscripts. Even just names.
